Benny the little rabbit loved to paint. Every morning, he hopped outside with his colorful brushes and bright paints. He loved making pictures of flowers, trees, and sunny skies. Painting made him very happy.

One day, Benny noticed his paints were all separate colors: red, blue, yellow, and green. He wondered what would happen if he mixed them. Carefully, he dropped a bit of blue paint into the yellow. The color changed!

"Wow!" Benny said. The yellow and blue made a brand new color - green! He smiled wide and dipped his brush into new colors to try more mixing.

Next, Benny mixed red and yellow. "Look! It turns orange!" he giggled. Then, he mixed red and blue and made purple. Benny's paws were a little messy, but he felt like a magic artist.

Suddenly, Benny had a wonderful idea. "What if I mix all these new colors to make a rainbow garden?" he whispered to himself. Benny grabbed his big brush and started painting on the big, empty wall outside his burrow.

He painted bright red tulips, orange pumpkins, and yellow dandelions. Each flower was a special color made by mixing paints. Benny hummed a happy tune as he worked.

Benny noticed the garden felt too plain without blue sky. He mixed a soft blue and white to make fluffy clouds. Then, he painted birds flying high and butterflies dancing.

But then Benny realized something. His paints were running low! "Oh no," he said, "How will I finish my rainbow garden with so little paint?" He looked sadly at his half-finished wall.

Just then, Benny's friend, Lily the squirrel, came by. "Can I help?" she asked. Together, they found fresh berries, flowers, and leaves to make new, natural paints. Benny was excited!

They squished blueberries for blue, crushed flower petals for pink, and mashed leaves for green. Benny helped Lily mix the colors carefully. "This is better than paint from a shop!" Benny exclaimed.

With more colors to use, Benny finished painting the garden. Red roses blossomed, orange marigolds smiled, and purple violets swayed. The garden looked magical and full of life.

Benny stepped back and smiled. "My rainbow garden is perfect!" He felt proud and happy to have tried new things and worked with his friend.

That evening, the sun set behind the rainbow garden.
The colors glowed softly, and Benny dreamed of painting more magical places tomorrow.

From that day, Benny knew mixing colors could make anything special. He loved creating, sharing, and making the world brighter with his rainbow garden.

And every time friends visited, Benny showed them how mixing paints can make new colors, just like magic.

Benny the rabbit, the little artist, fell asleep with a big smile, ready for new colorful adventures tomorrow.
