Puppy Max loved his toys more than anything. He had balls, ropes, and squeaky ducks all over the park.

One sunny day, Max saw a squirrel watching him play with a shiny red ball. Max didn't want to share.

The squirrel asked politely, "Can I try your ball, please?" Max barked happily but kept the ball to himself.

Nearby, a little bird chirped, wanting to join the fun. Max held his rope tightly, unsure what to do.

Max watched the squirrel and bird looking sad. He felt a tiny tug in his heart. Maybe sharing could be nice?

Slowly, Max dropped the ball near the squirrel. The squirrel's eyes lit up, and he bounced the ball carefully.

Next, Max tossed the rope softly to the bird. The bird flapped his wings joyfully and tugged the rope gently.

Max laughed as the animals played with his toys.
Sharing felt warm and made the park happier.

A group of rabbits joined, asking if they could play too. Max wagged his tail and said, "Let's all share!"

Together, Max and the animals built a fun game with balls and ropes. Everyone took turns smiling and laughing.

As the sun set, Max felt proud. Sharing toys made new friends and grew his happy heart.

Max knew that toys were fun, but sharing them was even better. The park was full of friendship and joy.
